An environment with distracting audio can ruin the sound quality and degrade the integrity of an interview. Check for air-conditioning noises or outside traffic to make sure your interview can be conducted undisturbed by any ambient noises. A plane flying overhead or a siren outside can distract the viewer. 4

If your documentary film will include interviews, you may wish to shoot them first, because your subjects' answers may help you choose what to include in the rest of the documentary. The subjects that you are filming for the interview are unlikely to be actors or people used to being on camera, so it's very likely that they'll be nervous, and they may make mistakes.
